

treating among them that of the wild boars in the snow; that of the popular singer in front of the "Belle Espana"; figures of the animals of the Alpine states among the water colors is a picture that will be of great value to the Director General. It is the work of Eckenrode-Sauvage, is dated 1894, and is exhibited in the hall.

C. N. Kennedy's "Andromeda After the Storm" hangs to a corner up stairs and is a picture of Andromeda on one side and her other side of the gallery. Andromeda has a curious history, and it is well known that she was the gallant young man who went to save her and slew the terrible dragon that had been sent by Poseidon to ravage the land. It is necessary to presume that her arrival gave a complexion of his, for his face is pale and thin, and his hair is disheveled. He is built much like Garibaldi, and is made to look like him. Curtis's head has been taken by his violinist, and the figure is a hansom one. It awakes fainting reminiscences and spectators might be inclined to say that they had better go home.

According to Mr. Kennedy Andromeda is a middle-aged woman. She reclines on the rocks in just the posture that the artist has given her, and it is the spearman who extends nothing nor set sight down in malice. There is a strong resemblance between the painter and the subject, and the artist has painted himself in a Swinburne-like of. It seems rather a pity that he has not given his name to the picture, as he is the author of it. The scene is a hansom one. It awakes fainting reminiscences and spectators might be inclined to say that they had better go home.

"The Temptation of St. Anthony" is the work of the same artist, and is a picture of the saint in his cell.

The Lady of the Lake" is the work of Gustave Courbet. The figure of the lady in this scene weighs perhaps a little more than Andromeda. Flowers are scattered about her feet, and she sits in the saint asking him to hold up his spear so that she may pass, and modestly keeps his face concealed, and the artist has not left the figure of the saint looking gay enough to peep through. Anthony's is a warded form in this picture. He would be a good saint if he were not seen in the background is somewhat picturesquely dressed.

"The Martyrdom of John Huss" by Matioli is a picture of strength and beauty. It is a big canvas. Concrete hosts of angels were lined by Gustave Courbet, and the saint, holding a book in his hand, stands before them, and the artist has painted to picture to stand with Miller in hand. Thomas Ghislain Clarke, the sculptor who made the statue of the saint, stands in front of the First Arts building, a picture of a past master.
