THE FIRE AT HAYWARDS.—The following are further particulars from the Oakland News of September 11th, of the fire at Haywards, spoken of in the UNION yesterday as having occurred on Wednesday:

The fire broke out about a quarter before 1 o'clock P. M., in an unoccupied barn formerly used by Smalley & Stratton as a livery stable. A stiff northwest wind was blowing at the time, and the flames spread rapidly. The losses and insurance are as follows: Christian Herman, corner of D and Castro streets, bakery and grocery; loss, $6,000; insured for $2,500 in the Phœnix and Home. August Lacuhna, dwellings, restaurant and bar-room, on the west side of D street; loss, $6,000; insured for $2,000 in the North British. Fred. Grievano, saloon, dwelling and stable, on the west side of D street; loss, $1,500; insured in the Phœnix and Home for $1,000. Peter Zambriski, a small building occupied by Chinese, on the west side of D street; loss, $700; insured in the Firemen's Fund for $700. Daniel Salmon, junk store, on the west side of D street; loss about $600. D. Dyer, tenement house, west side of D street; loss, $800. Felix Baumberger, tenement house; fully insured for $1,500 in the Phœnix and Home. Charles Puff, undertaking establishment and dwelling, on Castro street; valued at about $1,500; no insurance. Smalley & Stratton; loss trifling, being but a shed and a few tons of hay. Wm. Meriento, dwelling; no insurance. Chinese hotel, east side D street, loss about $1,500; no insurance. Besides the above a number of families who occupied portions of some of the buildings destroyed lost their furniture and clothing. These seem to have found quarters elsewhere, fortunately, as no furniture was to be seen on the streets or neighboring lots yesterday.

HAYWARD.

Hayward is probably better supplied with newspapers than most inland towns, receiving daily the TRIBUNE and Transcript, of Oakland, S. F. Chronicle, Mail, Call, Post and Bulletion. No wonder the town was incorporated. Hayward has always been considered by outsiders as rather a smallburg, but ithas probably more business houses for its size than any placein the State. I will try and note them: Three tin stores, conducted by Messrs. Linekin & Bro, H. H. Mack, and Mr. Andett; two blacksmith shops, by J. L. River and Wm. Brown; one harness and saddle shop, owned by G. A. Goodell; two meat markets, Strobel & Neudeck and Adam May; three boot and shoe stores, P. Zambresky, Peter Hanson and Muller; two breweries, Booken & Hermann and Palmentag; two millinery shops, Mrs. J. C. White and Miss Rose Hinckley; two livery stables, D. S. Smalley and Wm. Hayward's; two barbershops, J. L. Pimentel and Mr. ——; three hotels, Oakes', Hayward's and and Planter's, besides one or two restaurants; saloons, probably not exceeding eight; Wells Fargo office with L. H. Brown as agent. A postoffice, Mr. Cooper, P. M.; bakeries, J. G. Carpenter, J. Pann; two drug stores, one in Collins store, and the other at the postoffice; Drs. Cooper, Reynolds and Kimball attend to all cases of sickness. The place has a flourishing paper, named the Journal, edited by Frank Dallam. Five stores, Geo. Brown, A. Collins, D. S. Culp & Son, B. H. River, and N. Nisson; Sons of Temperance, Champion of the Red Cross, and Good Templars, offset the influence of the saloons, and a long-established lodge of Odd Fellows. For the accommodation of visitors who arrive on the trains a variety of "hacks" are always at the station, on their arrival.

NEW BUILDINGS.

Mr. B. Haas' new store and dwelling house combined is a model of perfection. It, together with the fresh and neat appearance of Mr. P. Zambesky's boot and shoe store, causes Castro's store to assume quite a business look. Mr. Geo. Brown also did his store a good turn in placing before it a handsome lamp-post. This completes the run of lamps between Pierce and Calhoun, on Castro street. The almost completed building of Mr. Bakers, on Calhoun street, is an object of admiration by every one, and is, according to the city style, perfect. It will be finished in a few weeks.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. Peter Zambresky's addition to his old building, adjoining Mr. Haas' new one was completed, and received the finishing touches of the painters Wednesday, and he has already moved his goods into his new quarters.

The Fourth of July celebration at Hay wards Monday was a red-letter day lon to be remembered; a day that marked new era in our history, and showed wha energy and determination can do. Th thousands of strangers drawn here from curi osity went away with loud praises, not only for the admirable manner in which every thing was carried out, but also for the gen erous and hospitable way they were enter tained. Nothing was spared to make their stay pleasant, and the credit and high honor gained by the town is worth far more than the expense and trouble. Haywards hereafter will be known far and wide as a pushing, go-ahead town—a place where everybody can go and have a good time, feel at home, and want to come again. The large number of houses decor ated showed the liberal and patriotic feel ing prevailing. On Castro street, com mencing with the Journal office, D. S. Smalley's livery stable, Oakes Hotel, Col lins' store, A. R. Hall's residence, Haas jewelry store, Peter Zambresky's store, George Brown's dry goods store, the engine house, Nissen's store, to Lyons' Brewery, all sizes of flags lined the streets while streamers, bunting and original designs were prominent, be sides evergreens by the wholesale. Look ing up Calhoun street the sight was temporary relief. The last time that smoking was tried the bees turned on the men and chased them almost to Haywards.

A couple of days ago a final attempt was made to get rid of the bees by the use of sulphur. The result was successful, and there is not a single bee or larva left in the barn, but neither is there any barn or lots of other things that were in it a week ago.

The bees had taken up cozy quarters in a currant chest and the chest was quite close to one of the barns on the ranch. The sulphur was kept burning all the afternoon, and about dark all the fire was supposed to have been extinguished. The family and farmhands retired, and felt quite certain that they would be no longer troubled with bees.

It was nearly midnight when a party of young men consisting of Frank Zambresky, Manuel Rodgers, Joe Goodell,

A "hard-times social" was given in Haywards last evening by the Native Daughters for the benefit of the approaching street fair. Some of the dancers were quite ridiculous in their rags and the informality of the affair made it most enjoyable. Beans were served on wooden plates. Brave Days Are Gone

Fire Department History Recalls Days Of Hand Pumps And Horse-Drawn Steamers

"A little after 9 o'clock there was a streak of greased lightning around the corner of A street and flying up Castro, and as he passed by the livery stable he had just breath enough to yell that 'the Smalley barn in the rear was on fire.'

"It was Joe Riggs, member of the fire company, and he almost dropped on reaching the engine house after ringing the bell.

"It did not seem a second before the brave boys driven by Jack Carr came tearing down Castro and the most rapid coupling to the hydrants on A and Castro and A and Watkins took place.

"The fire was then leaping across the alleyway and despite the fact they were handicapped by the lack of (water) pressure, aided in there being no wind, the firemen quickly had it under control . . . the brave firemen saved the day."

THIS ACCOUNT of a July 1913 fire in Hayward from the Twice-A-Week Review captures some of the drama which surrounds the history of fire fighting in Hayward.

By 1913 a fire company had been serving Hayward for half a century. The first company was founded by Charles T. Ward in the early 1860s.

Relying on buckets and counting many of the town's most distinguished citizens among its ranks, the company sought to protect Haywards from the fiery monster which consumed early California towns with frequency.

Not until 1870 did the fire company graduate from buckets to a hand pumper. Then, two years after an earthquake and fire destroyed much of the town's central district, a hand pumper was purchased from Stockton.

IT WAS ONLY 20 years old, highly polished and the pride of the small town lying along the Bay's southern shore. It had come around the Horn in 1850 and served a San Francisco fire company before being purchased by Stockton.

The pumper is still in Hayward, property of the city.

The fire company in the early 1870s was led by Ward and had Asa Collins as its foreman. Among its members were William Hayward, first American settler after whom Hayward is named, and F. D. Atherton, a major landholder in the area.

Later as chief, Collins offered the company and its fine pumper to the newly incorporated city as its fire department, an offer the city trustees accepted.

In 1882 Haywards purchased a large hand pumper called the "Jeffries." It was rated at 300 gallons per minute and took 12 men on each side to operate the pump booms.

When word of fire was carried to the Castro street fire house and the alarm struck on the bell, company members raced to seize the pumpers' tongue and move it into the street.

AS MORE MEMBERS came up they would take their places to haul the heavy apparatus rapidly through town. Once at the fire, the pumper would be halted at the nearest cistern, the suction hose dropped into the water and designated members would man the hoses. Others seized the pump booms to begin the rhythmic up-down-up-down which filled the lines with water.

Two years later, however, the city installed water mains and fire hydrants, and hose carts replaced the handpumpers.

Prior to the 20th century, other chiefs of the department included Bat Knudson, Tom Lane, John Fan, Ed Drew and Peter Zambresky.

It was during this period the Native Sons organized the Chisholm fire company, with a hose cart kept on "A" street above Main.

JOSEPH GODELL, 85, 1245 "B" street, long-time volunteer, recalls that men of the Hayward fire company called the "A" street company the "white collar gang." It included Hayward and others who were in the pioneer company.

A great sport in the hose cart days, Godell continued, was racing between crews of fire departments in the East Bay. So important were these races that B. Haas, who started a jewelry store here in 1868, circulated a petition to get eight foot high wheels for Hayward's hosecart, thus giving it a better chance for victory.

The Chisholm fire company only lasted a few years in the 90s Godell recalled.

The year 1901 was an important one for Hayward's fire fighters. Manuel Riggs assumed leadership of the department which was to last for 42 years. During his chiefship, fire apparatus changed from hand-drawn to horses to trucks.

ALSO IN THAT year the first of three big fires occurred at Hunts cannery. Godell remembers it was the third stroke of the alarm bell for the Hunts fire which cracked the old fire bell.

It was replaced by the bell which still hangs above the Castro street station.

Nine years after Riggs took over, Hayward had its first horse-drawn combination chemical-hose wagon. The rig was purchased by the department with its own funds.

In 1912 Hayward taxpayers voted down a $14,000 bond issue proposed to build a new fire house and set up an alarm system. The firemen weren't to be denied, however, and six months later in a second election, the bonds were passed.

THE "NEW" fire house was built for $9918 by C. N. and Frank Lindsay and still serves Hayward as its central station. It was built on the site of the previous fire house.

It was during this same period that Riggs and his department had considerable trouble with the water supply problem. Even with the horse-drawn steam pumpers, pressure was inadequate for effective fire fighting.

"The San Lorenzo Water company came in for a roasting by Fire Chief Riggs and Mayor Meyer," the Twice-A-Week Review reported in 1913. What good are firemen at a fire if there is no water, the chief asked.

For the past four years the rapidly growing department has been headed by Chief Matt Jimenez. It has expanded to two stations and has two more planned for construction.
